BREAKING NEWS jazzwise.com 24.08.06: Rashied Ali blasts Pizza on the Park into space

The ex-Coltrane drummer and his band, including hot newcomers Lawrence Clark, tenor sax, and Jumaane Smith, trumpet, alongside pianist Greg Murphy and bassist Joris Teepe, wasted little time in raising the performance to an intense, deeply spiritual level the likes of which had never been heard in this venue before. Ali took pieces by Eric Dolphy, James 'Blood' Ulmer and Don Cherry and reshaped them into sonic launch pads for Smith and Clark to soar deep into the stratosphere, climbing higher and higher over the drummer's galvanic rolling thunder. Watch for an in-depth review in October's Jazzwise, out on 29 September.

Dusted Reviews

Review date: Feb. 26, 2006

Trumpeter Jumaane Smith's "Shied Indeed" - one for the leader - sports one of the hippest stop-time unison breaks I've heard in quite a while. It jumps right out of the middle of a simple but effectively modal head, broadsiding the unsuspecting listener with a brick-textured chunk of hard-edged compositional prowess.

Kudos have to be given to Buble for not over-emoting on Georgia, a song that often brings out the worst in singers. He played it straight, even let trumpet player Jumaane Smith take over the spotlight on a fiery solo. That was probably the last serious highlight

I am so very proud to feature on my www.jazzoids.com site Jumaane Smith's new release. This is a beautiful album sure to please the ear of the most discerning jazzoid. It is truly an instant classic, coming from the next generation of musicians. In this case a rising star, trained in the tradition of, and by the masters. The best thing about this album, is the promise that you will be listening to Jumanne Smith for many years to come.

Michael Bublé
Madison Square Garden

Monday and Tuesday

Much of the time singer Michael Bublé, at 38, is still the world's greatest wedding singer, serving up knockoffs of arrangements by Darin and Sinatra. But when he takes the trouble to do something more original—like his swing-style treatments of rock-era classics—then he becomes virtually the only pop star of his generation to reveal an understanding of such anachronistic concepts as interpretation, intonation and time. There are plenty of such moments on his most recent album, last year's "To Be Loved," notably a Basie-esque revision of Randy Newman's "You've Got a Friend In Me." As a bonus, the singer's band includes the terrific trumpeter Jumaane Smith.

Best known to audiences throughout the world as the lead trumpeter for international superstar Michael Bublé for the past decade, multi-faceted singer, entertainer and musician. Jumaane Smith is set to make his highly anticipated, critically acclaimed independent standards-filled debut album I Only Have Eyes For You. Smith, whose collaborations range from pop idols to jazz legends, including Stevie Wonder, Quincy Jones, Aretha Franklin, Alicia Keys, The Jonas Brothers, Justin Bieber, Ariana Grande, Barbara Streisand, Natalie Cole, Wynton Marsalis, Herbie Hancock, Santana, Chris Botti and others.

"I strived to create an intimate album which focused on the sentiment of love and romance while being perfect for any occasion and best to be enjoyed with a glass of wine and someone you care about"

Executive produced by Smith and produced by Dave Pierce, "I Only Have Eyes For You" is a lush celebration of the Great American Songbook featuring interpretations of classics full of personal emotion. The collection includes vocal performances by Smith, Bublé (the opening track, "Come Rain or Come Shine"), a capella group Naturally 7 ("I Only Have Eyes For You") and young pop classical sensation Jackie Evancho ("La Vie En Rose").

Legendary critic Don Heckman of the LA Times,

Downbeat, JazzTimes writes "Jumaane is a very special artist....a guy who is managing to be a unique and irresistibly creative voice at a time when most players are simply trying to imitate their favorite, a very listenable album"

Will Friedwald of the Wall Street Journal echoes these words, calling Smith a "terrific and prodigious trumpeter". Friedwald also writes "The trumpeter's first album, "I Only Have Eyes for You" has him evoking classic standard songs as well as artists that have inspired him over the years: "La Vie en Rose" pays homage to Louis Armstrong, not Edith Piaf, while others recall the lyricism of Bobby Hackett and the jagged edge of Miles Davis. But in his desire to exult melody and accessibility, the trumpeter that Mr. Smith reminds us the most of is Chris Botti. The new album leads off with "Come Rain or Come Shine" as a voice / trumpet duo with longtime associate Michael Bublé, and offers one of that superstar's best-ever best ever renditions of a classic song, making us wish that the brassman and the Canadian crooner would undertake a full-length album and / or concert together."

Sandy Shore, president of SmoothJazz.com global radio, says of the collection that it's "an instant essential album, one that is definitive and timeless, a jazz recording appealing to a wide audience of music enthusiast with cool, classic sensibilities...This is a must have...delightfully pleasing to the ears!"

One of only 17 musicians (including only four trumpeters) invited to join the inaugural class of Jazz Studies at the Juilliard School in 2001, Smith - who trained there for four years on a full scholarship - has appeared on numerous Grammy winning recordings. His musical accomplishments include playing the Grammy Awards show with Stevie Wonder; recording "As I Am" with Alicia Keys; appearing on American Idol, performing at the White House for both Bill Clinton and George Bush and scoring and performing music for the critically acclaimed films "Handsome Harry and Being In The World."

celebrated award winning Jazz Trumpeter and Vocalist Jumaane Smith. Best known as the lead trumpeter for international Canadian superstar Michael Bublé, Smith performed to a small audience as he debuted his album 'I Only Have Eyes For You.' Warm and down to earth, Jumaane won over the crowd with his stellar performance of old Jazz standards and new personal compositions.
